

THE CONSTITUTION.

PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

THE DAILY CONSTITUTION is published every day, except Monday, and is delivered by carrier in the city, or mailed postage free at $1 per month, $2.50 for three months, or $10 a year.

THE CONSTITUTION is for sale on all trains ending out of Atlanta, and at news stands in the principal southern cities.

ADVERTISING RATES depend on location in the paper, and will be furnished on application.

CORRESPONDENCE containing important news selected from all parts of the country.

ADDRESS all letters and telegrams, and make all drafts or checks payable to THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Georgia.

ATLANTA, GA., JANUARY 17, 1884.

INDICATIONS for the South Atlantic states: fair weather, followed Thursday afternoon or night by local rains, northeasterly winds, rising barometer in northern portion followed by falling, slight fall in southern portion, followed by rising, colder generally, followed by warmer weather.

The Mexican treaty, now before the senate for ratification, is roundly abused as being intended to open a market for the Standard oil company.

The counsel of James Nutt, the young man who killed Dukes, the murderer of his father, have gained such points from the prosecution that acquittal is regarded as certain.

The Chinese are beginning to talk very defiantly about France. They declare that Germany only humbled the arrogant country, and it remains for China to crush her completely.

Drunkard prices make just as disagreeable husbands as teetotalers. This leading member of the German royal family has found out and she seeks a divorce from him therefore.

The proposed reduction in the rate of city tax this year from one and a half to one and a third per cent will be a welcome relief to those who do not like the frequent visits of the tax collector.

REDUCING THE CITY TAXES.

Our people will be surprised to read that Mayor Goodwin and Mr. Dunning recommend a reduction of the city tax-rate, and profess their ability to carry all the city departments and continue the street improvements, under the revenues from the reduced rate.

The provisions of the charter are so stringent—requiring the city to pay cash as she goes and pass $2,000 annually to the sinking fund—that for several years the city has had close sailing. At one time it was held that she could not possibly administer the government unless the charter provisions were loosened. It is surprising now and gratifying to learn that we have not only staid within the charter, maintained all the city departments and made heavy improvements, but have actually a surplus beyond present or prospective needs.

It is a question as to whether the people will be glad to hear that a reduction of the tax-rate is recommended. We have a great and growing city. It must meet all the demands made on its government, and the expectations of its friends. Low tax is a good thing. But fine schools, good streets, parks, bridges, abundant water, are better. If we can have all these things and low taxes also, then there will be general congratulation. Our tax rate is already lower than that of any city in the state. It is fairly informed.

OUR YELLOW PINE FORESTS.

Major R. B. Reppard, writing to the Southern Lumberman for January, gives some very interesting facts and figures concerning the future of the lumber interests. The article is hopeful, but it contains predictions and estimates that ought to arouse the timber-cutters and mill men to the necessity of prudence and caution in the management of the vast interests under their control. During the past two years the yellow pine lumber interests have passed through a very trying period. The decline in prices amounted to a drop of $3 a thousand in ninety days. Major Reppard thinks that to about one-third of the mills has gone out of business. He is also of the opinion that, owing to the drought which prevailed in all parts of the south during the summer and fall months of 1883, production has been curtailed fully one million feet a day. The production will probably be curtailed still further, but this curtailment will ultimately work to the great advantage of the trade. The consumption of yellow pine is becoming more extended every day. It is taking the place of other woods not only in useful but in ornamental directions. Duly considering all these things, Major Reppard says that in the near future the true value of yellow pine timber will be better known, and he advises the people of the south to hold on to their timbered lands as long as possible.

Major Reppard also calls attention to the unnecessary destruction of our pine forests by the turpentine industry. The pine orchards and forests of North Carolina have already been destroyed to a large extent, and hundreds of the stills and thousands of the laborers that have been employed in stripping that state of its pine forests have been brought to Georgia, and in the southern and southwestern portions of the state, the work of destruction is now going on. It is no wonder that the naval stores market is weak. The turpentine men met in Savannah some time ago to consider the situation and the only remedy they could think of was to ask the railroads to reduce freights. This remedy, however, would have a tendency to increase production, and, for that very reason, is no remedy at all.

Major Reppard says it is a fact well known to the trade that millions of acres of our pine forests have been totally destroyed by the turpentine business, as it will be practically impossible for the mill men to reach the timber thus injured and saw it into lumber before it becomes valueless for saw-mill purposes. If the saw mill men could utilize the timber as soon as it had been abandoned by the turpentine men, millions of feet of lumber and millions of dollars would be saved to the country. Some of Major Reppard's figures relative to this unnecessary destruction of timber are very interesting. There are $700,000,000 worth of pine in Georgia at the market price, and nearly $200,000,000 will be destroyed by the turpentine interests if some practical plan be not adopted to prevent it; and what is said of Georgia Major Reppard thinks can be said of every other southern state.

Major Reppard alludes to the fact that the census claims a stumpage of 236,000,000 feet of yellow pine in the south, with a cut of 1,500,000,000 feet a year. With respect to the argument that yellow pine will last at the present rate of production one hundred and fifty years, Major Reppard believes that timber available for saw-mill purposes will be cut short fully one-third by reason of the devastation caused by turpentine; in other words, that the available stumpage will be reduced to 160,000,000,000 feet, at the same time the production be raised to 5,000,000,000 a year, our yellow pine forests will disappear in thirty-two years.

Major Reppard's views are worth considering. While other states are preparing to protect their forests from destruction, let Georgia give some attention to her vast yellow pine interests. If they cannot be saved, they can at least be economized.

GENERAL GORDON'S LETTER.

We print this morning a letter from General Gordon relative to certain insinuations against him in regard to the Huntington matter.

While we print General Gordon's letter with pleasure, there is little use in his having written it. Any man who knows General Gordon—who is conversant with his brave, frank and chivalric life—and then believes that he sold his vote or his influence, or that he ever came within a thousand miles of doing such a thing, has his belief grounded on stubborn malice.

Outside of the positive evidence in this case, which rest in the character of the record of General Gordon, and which are overwhelming to any man not blinded by prejudice, there is a negative proof that is equally convincing. General Gordon entered the senate a poor man. He lived in the strictest economy, leaving his children in Georgia, because he was not able to have them with him in Washington. In spite of all this, notwithstanding his salary of $6,000 a year, he left the senate poorer than he entered it. It is too much to say that his poverty made his senatorial life a constant personal humiliation, and it is well known that his poverty finally forced him to resign his place, leave the life that he loved, and abandon the brilliant career that was open to him as the foremost and most popular southern senator. Does this look like the course of a man who had bartered his vote or influence for money? There was never a day during his term of service when Senator Gordon, by colluding with any one of a dozen corporations, could not have commanded one fee that would have put him beyond the annoyances of his poverty. If nothing else did so, the one fact of the continued poverty under which he finally left public life, would be an honorable proof that he held his vote and his influence as a senator more sacred than any thing else.

But it is absurd to see a Georgia journal arguing in favor of General Gordon's absolute honesty in public life. That is a thing that every body believes, is a waste of time and paper.

The two great English liberals, Gladstone and Chamberlain, are two of the most prominent characters in the political world. Gladstone is a great man of the all-round kind. Entering the house of commons forty-six years ago, his brilliant career from that time onward has been prominent before the public. Oliver Wendell Holmes spoke of him as one "whose intervals of rest are proximate to his intervals of labor." Had he turned his attention exclusively to letters, the bar or the church he would undoubtedly have achieved success of the most splendid and enduring character. The great premier has passed through his long public and private career without stain. His motive has never been attacked by his opponents and he is disliked only by the degraded elements of society. While one of the most masterly rhetoricians of the age, it has always been remarked that his judicious reticence is of the most commanding order. When out of office seven years ago, Gladstone's power seemed to decline. He aged rapidly, and his health seemed broken. Since his return to power he seems rejuvenated, and the indications are that he has several useful years before him yet. Mr. Chamberlain, who divides the honors of liberal leadership with Mr. Gladstone, is still young, his motives have never been attacked by his radicals. He is a man of ability and daring. His motto seems to be: "Let what is practicable be at once embodied in legislation, and let us by agitation and debate prepare the people for what now seems impracticable." While an effective speaker, he is not an orator. He wears an eye-glass, a blue dress, dresses fashionably and would pass for a dandy rather than a statesman. He has many elements of greatness, and the people look upon him as the future prime minister.

The spirit of treason which lurks behind the employments of crests and coats of arms by American citizens, ought to be dealt with by law. It is sad to reflect that the first to be the president of the United States—Chief of the Republic.

The presidential timber is getting so thin and so far apart as if a gang of North Carolina timbermen had been working them out.

New York society is in a terrible pucker over the disappearance of an ex-cook. Stewart's bones disappeared, and now a crazy restaurant keeper walks out into space. Truly New York society has a hard time.

Mr. BLAINE is about to issue his book from the press. Some of the politicians are preparing to criticize it.

A WELL FORTIFIED VIEW in the Southern Lumberman says that the yellow pine of Georgia is worth as it stands fully $700,000,000. The turpentine business is rapidly wasting this valuable timber. Millions of acres have thus been destroyed. After the turpentine men abandon the timber large quantities of it burn down, blow down and die before it can be reached by the sawmill men. It is argued that the yellow pine forests of the south will last at the present rate of production 150 years, but the writer above quoted thinks that the timber available for sawmill purposes will be cut short fully one-third by the devastations of the turpentine men. The great need of the south is in the timber. In eight years it is safe to predict that the yellow pine lumber product of the south will be 5,000,000,000 feet a year. The present long depression will be followed by higher prices. During the war yellow pine sold at the north for $80 and $90 per thousand. In twenty-five or thirty years the same figures may be reached again.

It is now generally conceded that when a case is put into the hands of detectives nothing more will be heard of it. We are reminded of this by the fact that the Connecticut society of escaped murderers is about to hold its semi-annual convention.

THE CONSTITUTION.

PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

THE DAILY CONSTITUTION is published every day, except Monday, and is delivered by carrier in the city, or mailed postage free at $1 per month, $2.50 for three months, or $10 a year.

THE CONSTITUTION is for sale on all trains ending out of Atlanta, and at news stands in the principal southern cities.

ADVERTISING RATES depend on location in the paper, and will be furnished on application.

CORRESPONDENCE containing important news selected from all parts of the country.

ADDRESS all letters and telegrams, and make all drafts or checks payable to THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Georgia.

ATLANTA, GA., JANUARY 17, 1884.

INDICATIONS for the South Atlantic states: fair weather, followed Thursday afternoon or night by local rains, northeasterly winds, rising barometer in northern portion followed by falling, slight fall in southern portion, followed by rising, colder generally, followed by warmer weather.

The Mexican treaty, now before the senate for ratification, is roundly abused as being intended to open a market for the Standard oil company.

The counsel of James Nutt, the young man who killed Dukes, the murderer of his father, have gained such points from the prosecution that acquittal is regarded as certain.

The Chinese are beginning to talk very defiantly about France. They declare that Germany only humbled the arrogant country, and it remains for China to crush her completely.

Drunkard prices make just as disagreeable husbands as teetotalers. This leading member of the German royal family has found out and she seeks a divorce from him therefore.

The proposed reduction in the rate of city tax this year from one and a half to one and a third per cent will be a welcome relief to those who do not like the frequent visits of the tax collector.

REDUCING THE CITY TAXES.

Our people will be surprised to read that Mayor Goodwin and Mr. Dunning recommend a reduction of the city tax-rate, and profess their ability to carry all the city departments and continue the street improvements, under the revenues from the reduced rate.

The provisions of the charter are so stringent—requiring the city to pay cash as she goes and pass $2,000 annually to the sinking fund—that for several years the city has had close sailing. At one time it was held that she could not possibly administer the government unless the charter provisions were loosened. It is surprising now and gratifying to learn that we have not only staid within the charter, maintained all the city departments and made heavy improvements, but have actually a surplus beyond present or prospective needs.

It is a question as to whether the people will be glad to hear that a reduction of the tax-rate is recommended. We have a great and growing city. It must meet all the demands made on its government, and the expectations of its friends. Low tax is a good thing. But fine schools, good streets, parks, bridges, abundant water, are better. If we can have all these things and low taxes also, then there will be general congratulation. Our tax rate is already lower than that of any city in the state. It is fairly informed.

OUR YELLOW PINE FORESTS.

Major R. B. Reppard, writing to the Southern Lumberman for January, gives some very interesting facts and figures concerning the future of the lumber interests. The article is hopeful, but it contains predictions and estimates that ought to arouse the timber-cutters and mill men to the necessity of prudence and caution in the management of the vast interests under their control. During the past two years the yellow pine lumber interests have passed through a very trying period. The decline in prices amounted to a drop of $3 a thousand in ninety days. Major Reppard thinks that to about one-third of the mills has gone out of business. He is also of the opinion that, owing to the drought which prevailed in all parts of the south during the summer and fall months of 1883, production has been curtailed fully one million feet a day. The production will probably be curtailed still further, but this curtailment will ultimately work to the great advantage of the trade. The consumption of yellow pine is becoming more extended every day. It is taking the place of other woods not only in useful but in ornamental directions. Duly considering all these things, Major Reppard says that in the near future the true value of yellow pine timber will be better known, and he advises the people of the south to hold on to their timbered lands as long as possible.

Major Reppard also calls attention to the unnecessary destruction of our pine forests by the turpentine industry. The pine orchards and forests of North Carolina have already been destroyed to a large extent, and hundreds of the stills and thousands of the laborers that have been employed in stripping that state of its pine forests have been brought to Georgia, and in the southern and southwestern portions of the state, the work of destruction is now going on. It is no wonder that the naval stores market is weak. The turpentine men met in Savannah some time ago to consider the situation and the only remedy they could think of was to ask the railroads to reduce freights. This remedy, however, would have a tendency to increase production, and, for that very reason, is no remedy at all.

Major Reppard says it is a fact well known to the trade that millions of acres of our pine forests have been totally destroyed by the turpentine business, as it will be practically impossible for the mill men to reach the timber thus injured and saw it into lumber before it becomes valueless for saw-mill purposes. If the saw mill men could utilize the timber as soon as it had been abandoned by the turpentine men, millions of feet of lumber and millions of dollars would be saved to the country. Some of Major Reppard's figures relative to this unnecessary destruction of timber are very interesting. There are $700,000,000 worth of pine in Georgia at the market price, and nearly $200,000,000 will be destroyed by the turpentine interests if some practical plan be not adopted to prevent it; and what is said of Georgia Major Reppard thinks can be said of every other southern state.

Major Reppard alludes to the fact that the census claims a stumpage of 236,000,000 feet of yellow pine in the south, with a cut of 1,500,000,000 feet a year. With respect to the argument that yellow pine will last at the present rate of production one hundred and fifty years, Major Reppard believes that timber available for saw-mill purposes will be cut short fully one-third by reason of the devastation caused by turpentine; in other words, that the available stumpage will be reduced to 160,000,000,000 feet, at the same time the production be raised to 5,000,000,000 a year, our yellow pine forests will disappear in thirty-two years.

Major Reppard's views are worth considering. While other states are preparing to protect their forests from destruction, let Georgia give some attention to her vast yellow pine interests. If they cannot be saved, they can at least be economized.

GENERAL GORDON'S LETTER.

We print this morning a letter from General Gordon relative to certain insinuations against him in regard to the Huntington matter.

While we print General Gordon's letter with pleasure, there is little use in his having written it. Any man who knows General Gordon—who is conversant with his brave, frank and chivalric life—and then believes that he sold his vote or his influence, or that he ever came within a thousand miles of doing such a thing, has his belief grounded on stubborn malice.

Outside of the positive evidence in this case, which rest in the character of the record of General Gordon, and which are overwhelming to any man not blinded by prejudice, there is a negative proof that is equally convincing. General Gordon entered the senate a poor man. He lived in the strictest economy, leaving his children in Georgia, because he was not able to have them with him in Washington. In spite of all this, notwithstanding his salary of $6,000 a year, he left the senate poorer than he entered it. It is too much to say that his poverty made his senatorial life a constant personal humiliation, and it is well known that his poverty finally forced him to resign his place, leave the life that he loved, and abandon the brilliant career that was open to him as the foremost and most popular southern senator. Does this look like the course of a man who had bartered his vote or influence for money? There was never a day during his term of service when Senator Gordon, by colluding with any one of a dozen corporations, could not have commanded one fee that would have put him beyond the annoyances of his poverty. If nothing else did so, the one fact of the continued poverty under which he finally left public life, would be an honorable proof that he held his vote and his influence as a senator more sacred than any thing else.

But it is absurd to see a Georgia journal arguing in favor of General Gordon's absolute honesty in public life. That is a thing that every body believes, is a waste of time and paper.

The two great English liberals, Gladstone and Chamberlain, are two of the most prominent characters in the political world. Gladstone is a great man of the all-round kind. Entering the house of commons forty-six years ago, his brilliant career from that time onward has been prominent before the public. Oliver Wendell Holmes spoke of him as one "whose intervals of rest are proximate to his intervals of labor." Had he turned his attention exclusively to letters, the bar or the church he would undoubtedly have achieved success of the most splendid and enduring character. The great premier has passed through his long public and private career without stain. His motive has never been attacked by his opponents and he is disliked only by the degraded elements of society. While one of the most masterly rhetoricians of the age, it has always been remarked that his judicious reticence is of the most commanding order. When out of office seven years ago, Gladstone's power seemed to decline. He aged rapidly, and his health seemed broken. Since his return to power he seems rejuvenated, and the indications are that he has several useful years before him yet. Mr. Chamberlain, who divides the honors of liberal leadership with Mr. Gladstone, is still young, his motives have never been attacked by his radicals. He is a man of ability and daring. His motto seems to be: "Let what is practicable be at once embodied in legislation, and let us by agitation and debate prepare the people for what now seems impracticable." While an effective speaker, he is not an orator. He wears an eye-glass, a blue dress, dresses fashionably and would pass for a dandy rather than a statesman. He has many elements of greatness, and the people look upon him as the future prime minister.

The spirit of treason which lurks behind the employments of crests and coats of arms by American citizens, ought to be dealt with by law. It is sad to reflect that the first to be the president of the United States—Chief of the Republic.

The presidential timber is getting so thin and so far apart as if a gang of North Carolina timbermen had been working them out.

New York society is in a terrible pucker over the disappearance of an ex-cook. Stewart's bones disappeared, and now a crazy restaurant keeper walks out into space. Truly New York society has a hard time.

Mr. BLAINE is about to issue his book from the press. Some of the politicians are preparing to criticize it.

A WELL FORTIFIED VIEW in the Southern Lumberman says that the yellow pine of Georgia is worth as it stands fully $700,000,000. The turpentine business is rapidly wasting this valuable timber. Millions of acres have thus been destroyed. After the turpentine men abandon the timber large quantities of it burn down, blow down and die before it can be reached by the sawmill men. It is argued that the yellow pine forests of the south will last at the present rate of production 150 years, but the writer above quoted thinks that the timber available for sawmill purposes will be cut short fully one-third by the devastations of the turpentine men. The great need of the south is in the timber. In eight years it is safe to predict that the yellow pine lumber product of the south will be 5,000,000,000 feet a year. The present long depression will be followed by higher prices. During the war yellow pine sold at the north for $80 and $90 per thousand. In twenty-five or thirty years the same figures may be reached again.

It is now generally conceded that when a case is put into the hands of detectives nothing more will be heard of it. We are reminded of this by the fact that the Connecticut society of escaped murderers is about to hold its semi-annual convention.

THE CONSTITUTION.

PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

THE DAILY CONSTITUTION is published every day, except Monday, and is delivered by carrier in the city, or mailed postage free at $1 per month, $2.50 for three months, or $10 a year.

THE CONSTITUTION is for sale on all trains ending out of Atlanta, and at news stands in the principal southern cities.

ADVERTISING RATES depend on location in the paper, and will be furnished on application.

CORRESPONDENCE containing important news selected from all parts of the country.

ADDRESS all letters and telegrams, and make all drafts or checks payable to THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Georgia.

ATLANTA, GA., JANUARY 17, 1884.

INDICATIONS for the South Atlantic states: fair weather, followed Thursday afternoon or night by local rains, northeasterly winds, rising barometer in northern portion followed by falling, slight fall in southern portion, followed by rising, colder generally, followed by warmer weather.

The Mexican treaty, now before the senate for ratification, is roundly abused as being intended to open a market for the Standard oil company.

The counsel of James Nutt, the young man who killed Dukes, the murderer of his father, have gained such points from the prosecution that acquittal is regarded as certain.

The Chinese are beginning to talk very defiantly about France. They declare that Germany only humbled the arrogant country, and it remains for China to crush her completely.

Drunkard prices make just as disagreeable husbands as teetotalers. This leading member of the German royal family has found out and she seeks a divorce from him therefore.

The proposed reduction in the rate of city tax this year from one and a half to one and a third per cent will be a welcome relief to those who do not like the frequent visits of the tax collector.

REDUCING THE CITY TAXES.

Our people will be surprised to read that Mayor Goodwin and Mr. Dunning recommend a reduction of the city tax-rate, and profess their ability to carry all the city departments and continue the street improvements, under the revenues from the reduced rate.

The provisions of the charter are so stringent—requiring the city to pay cash as she goes and pass $2,000 annually to the sinking fund—that for several years the city has had close sailing. At one time it was held that she could not possibly administer the government unless the charter provisions were loosened. It is surprising now and gratifying to learn that we have not only staid within the charter, maintained all the city departments and made heavy improvements, but have actually a surplus beyond present or prospective needs.

It is a question as to whether the people will be glad to hear that a reduction of the tax-rate is recommended. We have a great and growing city. It must meet all the demands made on its government, and the expectations of its friends. Low tax is a good thing. But fine schools, good streets, parks, bridges, abundant water, are better. If we can have all these things and low taxes also, then there will be general congratulation. Our tax rate is already lower than that of any city in the state. It is fairly informed.

OUR YELLOW PINE FORESTS.

Major R. B. Reppard, writing to the Southern Lumberman for January, gives some very interesting facts and figures concerning the future of the lumber interests. The article is hopeful, but it contains predictions and estimates that ought to arouse the timber-cutters and mill men to the necessity of prudence and caution in the management of the vast interests under their control. During the past two years the yellow pine lumber interests have passed through a very trying period. The decline in prices amounted to a drop of $3 a thousand in ninety days. Major Reppard thinks that to about one-third of the mills has gone out of business. He is also of the opinion that, owing to the drought which prevailed in all parts of the south during the summer and fall months of 1883, production has been curtailed fully one million feet a day. The production will probably be curtailed still further, but this curtailment will ultimately work to the great advantage of the trade. The consumption of yellow pine is becoming more extended every day. It is taking the place of other woods not only in useful but in ornamental directions. Duly considering all these things, Major Reppard says that in the near future the true value of yellow pine timber will be better known, and he advises the people of the south to hold on to their timbered lands as long as possible.

Major Reppard also calls attention to the unnecessary destruction of our pine forests by the turpentine industry. The pine orchards and forests of North Carolina have already been destroyed to a large extent, and hundreds of the stills and thousands of the laborers that have been employed in stripping that state of its pine forests have been brought to Georgia, and in the southern and southwestern portions of the state, the work of destruction is now going on. It is no wonder that the naval stores market is weak. The turpentine men met in Savannah some time ago to consider the situation and the only remedy they could think of was to ask the railroads to reduce freights. This remedy, however, would have a tendency to increase production, and, for that very reason, is no remedy at all.

Major Reppard says it is a fact well known to the trade that millions of acres of our pine forests have been totally destroyed by the turpentine business, as it will be practically impossible for the mill men to reach the timber thus injured and saw it into lumber before it becomes valueless for saw-mill purposes. If the saw mill men could utilize the timber as soon as it had been abandoned by the turpentine men, millions of feet of lumber and millions of dollars would be saved to the country. Some of Major Reppard's figures relative to this unnecessary destruction of timber are very interesting. There are $700,000,000 worth of pine in Georgia at the market price, and nearly $200,000,000 will be destroyed by the turpentine interests if some practical plan be not adopted to prevent it; and what is said of Georgia Major Reppard thinks can be said of every other southern state.

Major Reppard alludes to the fact that the census claims a stumpage of 236,000,000 feet of yellow pine in the south, with a cut of 1,500,000,000 feet a year. With respect to the argument that yellow pine will last at the present rate of production one hundred and fifty years, Major Reppard believes that timber available for saw-mill purposes will be cut short fully one-third by reason of the devastation caused by turpentine; in other words, that the available stumpage will be reduced to 160,000,000,000 feet, at the same time the production be raised to 5,000,000,000 a year, our yellow pine forests will disappear in thirty-two years.

Major Reppard's views are worth considering. While other states are preparing to protect their forests from destruction, let Georgia give some attention to her vast yellow pine interests. If they cannot be saved, they can at least be economized.

GENERAL GORDON'S LETTER.

We print this morning a letter from General Gordon relative to certain insinuations against him in regard to the Huntington matter.

While we print General Gordon's letter with pleasure, there is little use in his having written it. Any man who knows General Gordon—who is conversant with his brave, frank and chivalric life—and then believes that he sold his vote or his influence, or that he ever came within a thousand miles of doing such a thing, has his belief grounded on stubborn malice.

Outside of the positive evidence in this case, which rest in the character of the record of General Gordon, and which are overwhelming to any man not blinded by prejudice, there is a negative proof that is equally convincing. General Gordon entered the senate a poor man. He lived in the strictest economy, leaving his children in Georgia, because he was not able to have them with him in Washington. In spite of all this, notwithstanding his salary of $6,000 a year, he left the senate poorer than he entered it. It is too much to say that his poverty made his senatorial life a constant personal humiliation, and it is well known that his poverty finally forced him to resign his place, leave the life that he loved, and abandon the brilliant career that was open to him as the foremost and most popular southern senator. Does this look like the course of a man who had bartered his vote or influence for money? There was never a day during his term of service when Senator Gordon, by colluding with any one of a dozen corporations, could not have commanded one fee that would have put him beyond the annoyances of his poverty. If nothing else did so, the one fact of the continued poverty under which he finally left public life, would be an honorable proof that he held his vote and his influence as a senator more sacred than any thing else.

But it is absurd to see a Georgia journal arguing in favor of General Gordon's absolute honesty in public life. That is a thing that every body believes, is a waste of time and paper.

The two great English liberals, Gladstone and Chamberlain, are two of the most prominent characters in the political world. Gladstone is a great man of the all-round kind. Entering the house of commons forty-six years ago, his brilliant career from that time onward has been prominent before the public. Oliver Wendell Holmes spoke of him as one "whose intervals of rest are proximate to his intervals of labor." Had he turned his attention exclusively to letters, the bar or the church he would undoubtedly have achieved success of the most splendid and enduring character. The great premier has passed through his long public and private career without stain. His motive has never been attacked by his opponents and he is disliked only by the degraded elements of society. While one of the most masterly rhetoricians of the age, it has always been remarked that his judicious reticence is of the most commanding order. When out of office seven years ago, Gladstone's power seemed to decline. He aged rapidly, and his health seemed broken. Since his return to power he seems rejuvenated, and the indications are that he has several useful years before him yet. Mr. Chamberlain, who divides the honors of liberal leadership with Mr. Gladstone, is still young, his motives have never been attacked by his radicals. He is a man of ability and daring. His motto seems to be: "Let what is practicable be at once embodied in legislation, and let us by agitation and debate prepare the people for what now seems impracticable." While an effective speaker, he is not an orator. He wears an eye-glass, a blue dress, dresses fashionably and would pass for a dandy rather than a statesman. He has many elements of greatness, and the people look upon him as the future prime minister.

The spirit of treason which lurks behind the employments of crests and coats of arms by American citizens, ought to be dealt with by law. It is sad to reflect that the first to be the president of the United States—Chief of the Republic.

The presidential timber is getting so thin and so far apart as if a gang of North Carolina timbermen had been working them out.

New York society is in a terrible pucker over the disappearance of an ex-cook. Stewart's bones disappeared, and now a crazy restaurant keeper walks out into space. Truly New York society has a hard time.

Mr. BLAINE is about to issue his book from the press. Some of the politicians are preparing to criticize it.

A WELL FORTIFIED VIEW in the Southern Lumberman says that the yellow pine of Georgia is worth as it stands fully $700,000,000. The turpentine business is rapidly wasting this valuable timber. Millions of acres have thus been destroyed. After the turpentine men abandon the timber large quantities of it burn down, blow down and die before it can be reached by the sawmill men. It is argued that the yellow pine forests of the south will last at the present rate of production 150 years, but the writer above quoted thinks that the timber available for sawmill purposes will be cut short fully one-third by the devastations of the turpentine men. The great need of the south is in the timber. In eight years it is safe to predict that the yellow pine lumber product of the south will be 5,000,000,000 feet a year. The present long depression will be followed by higher prices. During the war yellow pine sold at the north for $80 and $90 per thousand. In twenty-five or thirty years the same figures may be reached again.

It is now generally conceded that when a case is put into the hands of detectives nothing more will be heard of it. We are reminded of this by the fact that the Connecticut society of escaped murderers is about to hold its semi-annual convention.

THE CONSTITUTION.

PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

THE DAILY CONSTITUTION is published every day, except Monday, and is delivered by carrier in the city, or mailed postage free at $1 per month, $2.50 for three months, or $10 a year.

THE CONSTITUTION is for sale on all trains ending out of Atlanta, and at news stands in the principal southern cities.

ADVERTISING RATES depend on location in the paper, and will be furnished on application.

CORRESPONDENCE containing important news selected from all parts of the country.

ADDRESS all letters and telegrams, and make all drafts or checks payable to THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Georgia.

ATLANTA, GA., JANUARY 17, 1884.

INDICATIONS for the South Atlantic states: fair weather, followed Thursday afternoon or night by local rains, northeasterly winds, rising barometer in northern portion followed by falling, slight fall in southern portion, followed by rising, colder generally, followed by warmer weather.

The Mexican treaty, now before the senate for ratification, is roundly abused as being intended to open

NEW YORK TOPICS.

MONICO THE LAST MALE OF HIS HOUSE.

Increased by Financial Speculation, He Became an Occasional Lunatic—Museum and Tricky.

The Value Placed Upon a Husband's Affection—The Tribune's Estimate.

NEW YORK, January 16.—Charles Delmonico, the

of whose death is now filling the papers, was

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

of his race. He was born in New York

THE STATES AROUND.

FROM VIRGINIA TO TEXAS, AND KENTUCKY TO FLORIDA.

Arrest of a Man in Chattanooga Supposed to be a Fugitive from Georgia—Conviction of Gamblers in Chattanooga—The World's Exposition—Assignment

by Telegraph to the Constitution.

Huntsville, January 16.—Adolph Adler, clothing and dry goods dealer, has been assigned.

Assets, $2,000; liabilities, $12,000; mostly in Cincinnati.

Dallas, Texas.

Dallas, January 16.—In the county court today

Charles Mathews was convicted of gambling and fined $50 and costs. He then compromised twenty-four other cases, paying $1,000 fine and costs. Numerous cases are pending against other gamblers.

Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Chattanooga, January 16.—Two weddings took place in this city today. Thomas Warren and Little John S. Hollis was arrested yesterday, supposed to be a fugitive from justice from Georgia. He was released, being the wrong man.

Last night thieves entered the house of John Musgrave and carried away a double barrel shotgun,

a pair of shoes, two pistols and several smaller articles. The city is now full of thieves.

John Brown has entered the case against the Clacson Southern railroad for $30,000 damages for the loss of his husband.

Agreed deal of grain has been shipped in South Carolina.

The city council of Tyler, Texas, offers to lease

the water works for fifteen years.

The death of Florida is a peculiarly slaughtered

in numbers all over Florida.

Building permits aggregating $83,000 were issued in a single day at San Antonio, Texas.

Georgia's scarier in Georgia county, South Carolina, than it has been in several years.

Dr. Hall, of Henderson, Texas, has a son 14 years old who weighs 75 pounds in his shirt sleeves.

There are thousands of wild geese at the shoals in the waters, just above Camden, South Carolina.

The South Carolina conference of the A. M. E.

church will be held at Georgetown on February 15th.

Richmond, Va., has applied for ten thousand square feet of space at the World's exhibition to be held in New Orleans.

The episode of the day in its appearance among the homes in New York, Ky., and five deaths were reported in a few hours Saturday.

The industrial exhibition of the agricultural society of South Carolina, will open January 23rd

and continue until February 23rd inclusive.

Over one hundred colored laborers have left

Williamburg county, South Carolina, in the last two weeks for Georgia, to work on turpentine lands.

Messrs. Dowell & Hancock, of Charlottesville,

Va., sold to Fred Gohardt, of New York, the bay

out "Bois," for $12,000, the largest price ever paid

for a Virginia raised colt.

Mr. Lawrence Hauley, a member of the Ford association of Savannah, has left for Galveston, Texas, to join the "silver king's association." He has a permanent assignment to by the negro, and when asked his name he gave it as John William Higgins and asked what was wanted with him. When told disorderly conduct, he began to demonstrate against being taken away from his wife, who

about this time began to raise a big racket.

He dressed and was taken to the barracks quietly. He was taken into the office of the chief of police, examined carefully, and answered to the description given of the negro wanted. Chief Wiley has written to the authorities in Valdosta advising them of the capture.

THE LEAP YEAR PARTY.

The leap year party given to-night at the Brown house was a very well attended. It has been planned by the young ladies, and no effort on their part was left undone to make the young men happy, who were so much scored by being escorted out. Among the couple were Mrs. S. R. Jones and Mr. John

Saunder, Mrs. Ben C. Smith and Mr. W. B.

Gresham, Mrs. George Kenner (Nashville) and

Mr. Robert Saunder, Mrs. Mary King New-

some and Mr. W. J. Woodson, Miss Mamie

White and Mr. A. G. Simmons.

Miss Ruth Smith, Mr. Eugene Harris, Miss

Daisy Huff, Mr. John Hoge, Miss Mary E.

Johnston, Mr. W. J. Felton, Miss Katie P.

Drane, Mr. Sol Hoge, Miss Minnie Finley, Dr.

George Ford, Miss Emily Myrland, Mr. Kenan

Hall, Miss Ida Holt, Mr. Howard Williams,

Miss Annie Maitland, Mr. Axel Freeman,

Miss Albert Lamar, Mr. Aleck Logan,

Miss Zella Rogers, Mr. Walter Lamar,

Miss Fannie Grier, Mr. Tracy

Miss Mary Lou Bacon, Mr. Cullen Battle, Miss

Claude Freeman, Mr. W. P. Edwards, Miss

Annie Hall, Mr. Floyd Ross, Miss Stella Hunt,

Mr. Lamar Richards, Mr. Campbell King, New-

Crawford (of Columbus), Mr. D. J. Fower, Miss

Mamie Ferrell (of Mississippi), Mr. Roff

Stamm, Miss Birdie Johns, Mr. Judson

Hill, Miss Lillie Dunlop, Mr. Henry

Mr. George Payne, Miss Nannie Jones, Mr.

Clifford Anderson, Miss Jones, Mr. C. D. Pier-

son, Miss Nellie Simms, Mr. Julian Rodgers,

Miss Ella Banks, Mr. Clarence Catlett, Miss

Annie Powers, Mr. Stewart Jones, Mr. Chester,

Miss Gussie Jones, Mr. B. C. Smith, Miss Annie

Persons, Mr. Wm. Redding, Mr. and Mrs. Geo

Wadley, Mr. and Mrs. L. Harris, Mr. and

Wm. B. Ross, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hagan, Mr.

and Mrs. Edward Schofield, Mr. and Mrs. E. J.

Wilmington, Mr. B. H. Williams, Mr. and

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Lamar, Mr. and Mrs. W. B.

Solomon, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Ingalls, Mrs. Bamp-

ton (N. Y.), Mr. S. R. Jones, W. Yates, Colonel

McLaren, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Ingalls, Mrs. Bamp-

ton (N. Y.), Mr. S. R. Jones, W. Yates, Colonel

McLaren, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Ingalls, Mrs. Bamp-

ton (N. Y.), Mr. S. R. Jones, W. Yates, Colonel

McLaren, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Ingalls, Mrs. Bamp-

ton (N. Y.), Mr. S. R. Jones, W. Yates, Colonel

McLaren, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Ingalls, Mrs. Bamp-

thick cord. Run the cord through the top

hem of the curtains and secure the ends to the boards. This permits the curtains to be drawn aside with ease. A pretty Watteau

or Greenaway picture done in outline work

will make the curtains more effective.

Napkins of linen are now turned up on one corner and embroidered with the initials or monogram. When done in red or blue color the effect is good and the colors will not run when washed.

Very pretty pillow-shams and bed-spreads

may be made out of coarse white cotton netting. Make the spread and shams of the exact size required, and work in white embroidery cotton in some simple design. A large monogram is usually worked in the center of the spread and also the shams. Blue or pink alaisa or cambric is placed on the bed

and pillows before putting on the covers, and bows of satin ribbon of the same color ornament the shams.

Velvet albums for photographs are now

very fashionable. They are intended to hold from two to six pictures and open out flat.

One can easily be made at home at half the expense if purchased. Take a piece of plush or velvet any shade you desire, and cut it an inch and a half wider than the photographs

to be placed in it and as long as you desire.

If for two pictures ten inches will be sufficient. Line with satin, leaving places for the pictures to be slipped in, and make in the form of a book. To finish broad cotton or satin ribbons of the shade of the velvet.

Special to The Constitution.

DEBATE, January 16.—The annual report of

Hon. M. A. Candler, superintendent of the Department of Education for the year 1887, shows that the school system is in a very healthy and prosperous condition. There are connected with the school, eleven male and fifteen female teachers, and seventy-three male and sixty-three female scholars.

Making a total of one hundred and seventy members. There are fifty-five families represented in the school. The average attendance during the year was ninety-three and one-half. Thirteen members of the school were united to the church during the year. The school has been a success in its aim and repeating success. Those entitled to their names placed on it for 1887 are Mr. M. A. Candler, superintendent; J. W. Kippard, of F. W. Williams,

Miss Adeline Adams, Miss Alice F. Hous-

man, Miss Belle Houston, Sarah A. Houston, Mary

A. Powell, and John C. Becher, John C. Hous-

man, Mary Lee Cauder, Ulrich Green, Louis

Ramspeck, W. J. Houston, Jr., scholars.

Professor "Pete" McCellan, Houston.

ITHACA, N. Y., January 16.—Professor Edward

Hitchcock, Jr., of Amherst, was appointed by the Cornell university professor of physical culture and hygiene. He will arrive in a few days.

The engagement of Professor "Pete" McCellan,

New York, appointed to the chair a year ago, has been accepted by the Southern States. His ap-

OPERA HOUSE.

FRIDAY AND SAT. Y. GRAND SATURDAY

JAN. 18 & 19. MATINEE.

THE

MADISON SQUARE

THEATRE COMPANY

From New York, in

HAZEL

APUREPLAY

FOR

ALL TIMES!

KIRKE

THE

BEST CASTE

YET

SEEN HERE

Unquestionably the most successful and popular play of the present day. Hazel Kirke has been produced upwards of

3,000 CONSECUTIVE TIMES.

and, like Tenyson's famous work, bids fair to "go on forever." Elegant Souvenir Files, of exceeding beauty, presented to all ladies who attend first performance. Every man an artist.

Matinee prices. Reserved seats at Phillips & Crew's.

